Nucleus adds further strength to account management and business development teams

Nucleus, the IFA-owned and controlled wrap platform, has expanded its account management and business development teams with two senior appointments.

Mike Wallis joins Nucleus as regional business development director. Reporting directly to business development director Barry Neilson, he will be responsible for further developing Nucleus' presence in the South of England. Mike was previously sales development director at Skandia, where he worked for the last 14 years.

Tom Coutts joins the business as an IFA account manager. Reporting to IFA account director Darren Lowry, Tom's key responsibility will be to support a number of the business' key accounts. Tom joins from Cavanagh Group, the IFA, where he was a technical adviser.

Commenting on the appointments, Neilson said:

"Tom and Mike join Nucleus at an extremely exciting time as we look to take our growth and development to the next level. Hugely talented, they both have a wealth of experience within the IFA marketplace and will help support the growing interest we are seeing in the Nucleus proposition."

Nucleus expects both teams to expand further in the coming months.
